Student Volunteers in Montana After Returning From Ecuador

Grace Milanowski started volunteering regularly at the Havre, Montana Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS) office in October 2011 when she moved to the state. She has assisted with field visits, filing and much more. Milanowski has proven to be hardworking, efficient and always willing to take on a project.

In addition to being a member of the Earth Team, Grace is currently an AmeriCorps volunteer at Montana State University-Northern with a program called Campus Corps. She supports a group of students who have community service jobs with various organizations. The group also does volunteer work on campus and in the community.

Before coming to Montana, Grace was a natural resources conservation volunteer with the Peace Corps in Ecuador for more than a year. While in Ecuador, she worked primarily with environmental education. She worked with local educators to develop environmental education curriculum and organized workshops for local communities.

Milanowski went to school for environmental science at the University of Michigan, but she calls Madison, WI home. Graduate school will be in her near future with plans to study wildlife conservation or sustainable agriculture.

Grace Milanowski volunteers in Montana at the Havre NRCS office. She recently returned from Ecuador, where she was a natural resources conservation volunteer with the Peace Corps.

The Earth Team is the volunteer component of the Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS), a USDA agency. For more about NRCS and the Earth Team, visit www.usda.nrcs.gov.
